

IRAQ

Searching for Hope

New Edition

The fascinating, first-hand account of one man's deepening involvement over seven years with Iraq.

As an envoy for peace, Andrew White is dedicated to religious and political reconciliation in Iraq and has frequently risked his life. In this new edition of his book, which tells a remarkable inside story, Andrew reflects on what he has seen in Iraq during his visits since 2005, including the escalating violence, working with the military and the involvement of the Americans. He also assesses what he considers to be mistakes in the peace process. Among the more dramatic moments are the trial of Saddam, at which Andrew was present; the abduction of the leaders of St George's church and their presumed death; and hostage crises including the death of colleagues. Andrew's personal struggle has been very real, but even at the worst moments, he never loses hope.

His picture of life on the ground in Iraq is as compelling as his insights into what goes on behind the political censors. Interspersed in this compelling account are reflections on such profound issues as the nature of evil, the occasional necessity of war and – perhaps the most urgent question – whether religion is part of the problem or the solution.

'This book is like a trip into the heart of Iraq without the risks and danger. Andrew White has written a gripping account with honesty and candour, clarity and objectivity, simplicity and brilliance.'

Dr R. T. Kendall

'The example of White shows how a living faith can, against all the odds, contribute to peace and reconciliation in the world.'

School of Oriental and African Studies Journal

Canon Andrew White is the former International Director of the Iraqi Institute of Peace and President of the Foundation for Relief and Reconciliation in the Middle East.

continuum

